A SPEECH BY One of The 7.

The Question Dispassionately Argued.

FRILOW VIRGINIANS:

The Readjuster party is asked to stand up and plead guilty and to follow that act by abdicating the government of Va. We are even requested to name as our successors the Funder party, whom we have recently caught handing over the key of the Treasury to the public creditor, who was to be the sole judge of the gauge of taxation. Certain of our own number who are dissatisfied as to the manner in which we have distributed partments. The objection if any, one the public patronage have gone over to of them is fatal to it. By the victory of the enemy and joined them in the effort to have us quit Virginia as soon as we have redeemed it. The best robes are promised these men and all sorts of preparty. To day they are bawling Northward that they mean to kill both liberalism and the Internal Recenue System. vice is neither new nor approved. If we should yield this canyass and orn over the State to the Bourbons that act would be to serve notice on the President that his friendly hand is neither wanted nor welcomed in Virginia. It would be a netification to the national government that we desire no amicable relations with it, and will have none: that the solid South is our hope and our fortress; that Va. though aspiring to become a manufacturing State will have no sympathetic relations with the manofacturing portlons of the Union.

Then move forward, friends of Vir ginis, and let us starn, imperishably on our time the splendid success we have mede in behalf of State Reform and National Reconclibation. As said Napoleon, beneath the Pyramlds, ten years ar looking at us from the heights of Virginia. We have restored free education and a free ballot. We have settled the public debt and reduced taxation. have rebuilt the asylunas, enlarged the colleges and closed the temple of the Janua. As these were worth winning hey are worth preserving. Let us awear they shall not perish. That those who ruined Va. shall not now rule Va. Fight this good fight and then let us shout:

paralysis of the school system and by kindred result the paralysis of the asylums followed.

Flushed with victory and elated by success the next attack was on the ballot. The constitution was amended so that universal suffrage became a farce and a fraud. The Bourbons were althe creditor had the key to the Treasury the officials were given the key to the ballot-box. So artfully contrived were the details of the scheme that the balance of power in elections was wholly in the control of the Bourbon officials. Assessment of the capitation tax became partial only and its voluntary payment was frequently defeated. Collectors and the assessors often coalesced in their efforts to prevent its payment, except in cases when their own favorites were to be the beneficiaries. By this means the classes most to be benefitted by Free Education were annually disfranchised afresh, so that they could not creditor had been invested with the soyreign power of passing annually his own appropriation bill. The dethronement of popular Education and popular Suffrage was complete and the conspirators were ensconced in every official citadel. The whole result was due to the syren song that the Lib-eral movement had, by restoring the State to the union, discharged its functions and the party must therefore be resolved into its original elements. Thus was the liberal policy that wrenched the State from Bourbouism in '69 defeated, by the same means now invoked against the liberal movement of

The demolition of a free ballot and free education was completed in 1876, but the injured aspect of the State began to be visible only in 1877. Both the old Whigs and Democrats were masquerading under the name of Conservatives, refusing alike to assume the name of either of the national parties. The name of True Republican, under which the victory of 69 had been won, was abandoned as soon as the policy of Lib-eralism had been discarded. In 1877 it became plain that the popular heart was ready to revolt against the Bourbon policy which was then beginning to show its results. In the Conservative State convention of Aug. 8th, a tub was thrown to the whale and while the deluded were amusing themselves over it, a Bourbon was under a fraudulent dis-guise nominated for the office of Governor and a Legislature of mixed expectaof trenchery less base than this refusal to execute decree of the August convention, could have precititated the revolution which sent its representatives to Mozart Hall. The people had discoverexecuted. The Readjuster party was formed and to it was intrusted the duty of repudiating and reversing the work of the Bourbons. The campaign of 1879 followed, being the first one under the Readjuster organization, and resulted in the capture of the Legislature and the election of Gen. Mahone to the Senate of the U. S. But the Bourbons still held possession of the two other co-ordinate departments of the State government, the Supreme Court and the Governorship. The Riddleber-ger Debt Bill was passed but was killed by the executive veto. For the information of the young men of the Country, to whose keeping the liberal movement must soon be entrusted, it may be well to state that the State Government is composed of three co-ordinate and equal Departments—the Ex-ecutive, Legislative and Judicial. In other words the Governor, the Legislature and the Supreme Court. Before any measure can be operative it must be assented to by each of these three De-'79 we succeeded in obtaining control of only the Legislative Department. All that could be accomplished by the Legislature alone was the election of a Senator, the County Judges, and the State assent of the two other Departments. The struggle for the two remaining Departments became the business of the campaign of 1881. The Supreme Court being elected for 12 years, the Governor not, of course, occurred since '60 an expected to repeat the experiment.

Our great liberal movement began in til that of 1881. The stake to be played 1869, with the Walker campaign. That was a coalition between the Democrats and "True Republicana." It succeeded the mean time our new Senator, Mahone the mean time our new Senator, Mahone the means of deceiving the public.
